

Turkey's Armenian Subjects.

We reprint this morning from the European edition of the HERALD an interesting article about the new Armenian Patriarch, who took advantage of the visit of the HERALD's correspondent to send his apostolic benediction to all Armenians residing in this country. The facts about Armenia and the Christians of that country contained in our correspondent's letter are of no little importance as showing how, far from being oppressed, the natives have, from the time they became subjects of Turkey, enjoyed a greater degree of religious freedom than they did when their land was a dependency of the Eastern Empire. Not only is this the fact, but their religion has proved no bar to their entering public life, and many of the highest posts under the Turkish government are filled by Armenian Christians.
